

Murder Tales: Unsolved, Volume II

H. N. Lloyd turns, once again, to those mysteries in the annals of crime, which have kept detectives and armchair sleuths guessing. In this second volume of Murder Tales: Unsolved, Lloyd will not only look at certified classics of unsolved murder, but will also question when we should consider a case to be solved. The many cases looked at in this volume include: The Black Dahlia: Americas most famous unsolved crime. When a strikingly pretty starlet was found sawn in half in 1940s Hollywood, the victim left a mystery behind which has beguiled and infuriated ever since. Jack the Stripper: A killer who murdered sex workers, before stripping their bodies, removing their teeth, and dumping them by the river Thames. The police investigation touched upon the murky worlds of sex parties for the landed gentry, pornography, and snuff movies. Eventually, the police suspected one of their own, but just who was Jack the Stripper? The Boston Strangler: We all think we know who the Boston Strangler was, but just how good was the evidence against Albert DeSalvo? Amerithrax: The biggest murder hunt in criminal history, an investigation that has cost millions and has spanned the globe. A killer who chose a deadly pathogen as his weapon of choice. An ongoing modern classic murder mystery. These cases and many more fill these blood soaked pages, and will have you asking questions long after you finish the last page.
